(This Note is not part of the Order.)

This Order extends the period of office of the initial membership of the General Teaching Council for Scotland from four years six months to five years. It also alters the constitution of the Council, as from 1st February 1971, by increasing the representation of registered teachers, abolishing certain electoral distinctions between headteachers and others and requiring an elected member to vacate office on his ceasing to serve in the category of educational establishment in respect of which he was elected.
